These include laptop computers, data/video projectors, digital cameras, video cameras, televisions, DVD/VHS players, transparency projectors, slide projectors, projection screens, and audio recorders. In addition, the IMS provides a wide variety of audio/video equipment, facilities, and services to students for media projects or productions related to their approved class assignments.

What types of services can Andruss Library's staff provide?

The Andruss Library faculty and staff provides countless services. On their website, librarians have developed subject guides for students in many disciplines and tutorials to help students, faculty, and staff navigate the library. As liaisons to the academic departments, faculty librarians can provide library instruction to classes by invitation of instructor and discuss ways of improving information literacy. While Andruss Library is not a research library, PALCI and ILLiad, the inter-library loan services and BU document delivery service will help faculties conduct their research.

For more information, their Library Information & Services for BU Faculty page is a great place to know more about what Andruss Library can do for you.

Where is Human Resources?
